Banquet raises money

Hunger and homelessness were two issues discussed at the Banquet for Hunger which took place Dec. 2 on campus. The event, sponsored by University Housing, raised money for St. Vincent de Paul's holiday food baskets to be distributed among hungry Lane County families.

Hunger in Lane County is a widespread problem. Information provided by Oregon Food Bank indicates that 49 percent of the hungry are children.

Although the United States is one of the wealthiest countries in the world, 20 percent of the food produced in this country is thrown away, according to a fact sheet prepared by the Oregon Food Bank.

These figures were just a few of many mentioned at the banquet. The event raised $560 for the holiday food baskets, and approximately 280 tickets were sold.

Banquet attendants discovered firsthand what it means to go away hungry from the dinner table. Three types of dinners were served, each representing a different class of eating.

Students who received the luxury dinner consisting of spaghetti, green beans, bread and soda should "smile and feel blessed," said Carol Pelster, St. Vincent de Paul Society's western region youth representative.

The middle level dinners, consisting of soup, and the poverty level dinners which were rice, were met with sighs, complaints and comments on hunger by students. "I'm so happy I can go get something after this," a student said.

Eugene attorney John Van Landingham spoke on the problems of a lack of low income housing in Lane County. Van Landingham is chairman of the Lane County Housing Task Force.

There are about 3,000 low subsidized units in Oregon for families. However, these have long waiting lists, which are only open once a year, Van Landingham said. The lists are open for a week on a lottery basis.

Also, many homeless cannot afford the $500 to $600 fee to stay in the units, Van Landingham said. Operators of these units can charge this amount because no deposit is required. The two fastest growing homeless are single parents with children and working families. Neither of these groups can pay the fee for low income housing.

The rental vacancy rate is 1 percent to 3 percent, while a healthy rate is 5 percent, Van Landingham said. Besides an availability problem there is an affordability problem.

"For lower income people they can't find a place and if they do they can't afford it," he said. "In 1988 over 3,000 people were paying more than 70 percent of their income for rent."

Van Landingham ended his speech by mentioning a homeless grade school student who drew a picture of a house with many doors. When asked by his teacher why his house had so many doors the child said, "so all the homeless people can get inside."
