The Frugal Gourmet On Our Immigrant Ancestors

Keep your special recipes from your grandmother.

JEFF SMITH

Hardcover $19.95

The Frugal Gourmet On Our Immigrant Ancestors

In this book, Jeff Smith rejoices in the fact that the concept of the melting pot never did entirely work here in the United States. Traveling from one end of this land to the other, Jeff feasted at the tables spread by thirty-five ethnic traditions. He returned to his kitchen to prepare an array of dishes that entices us on every page. Companion to a brand-new thirty-nine-part national public television series, The Frugal Gourmet On Our Immigrant Ancestors will either remind you of the tastes and smells of your grandmother's or lead you to rediscover what your parents nearly forgot as they adapted to the New World. Just look at what

Jeff found, a rich-tasting Tongue Stew from the Basque people near Reno, Nevada; a scrumptious Kugelis Potato Pudding from the Lithuanian Church near Scranton, Pennsylvania; a tasty and satisfying recipe for Lamb Shanks from the Armenian Community near Fresno, California.

Of course this wouldn't be a new cookbook by the "Frug" if he didn't also give us his ingenious hints and practical secrets of technique. This time he's even given us one on how to render chicken fat (real schmaltz). He also supplies a complete glossary of cooking terms and ingredients harder to find in some localities.

From cover to cover Jeff's new cookbook is a triumph of passion and expertise and, above all, the joy of food.
