"to defend the flag and support the soldiers who are spending their time freeing Kuwait. We are already free, why shouldn't we fight to free Kuwait?"

"That's what we are fighting for, peace," said one war supporter.

Matt Coleman, a war supporter who held up an American flag as protesters passed by said, "War's begun, and they're protesting. I'm backing our country and the president."

Another war proponent yelled, "It's too late, go home."

After a conflict with protesters Tuesday night, Eugene Police maintained a supervisory position during Wednesday's protest as they directed traffic and diffused conflicts between the two groups of demonstrators.

Sgt. Tim McCarthy said the demonstrations had been relatively peaceful throughout the evening. He praised the march organizers for working hard to keep the protest non-violent.

"So far the behavior has been excellent," McCarthy said. "There have been a couple of conflicts but they were taken care of. (The protest organizers) worked hard at keeping it peaceful."

"We're not here to make arrests, just to keep the peace," said officer William Spicher. "They're being very cooperative with us."

The scene contrasted with Tuesday night's protest, when four University students were arrested while protesting on the Interstate 5 viaduct where it crosses Franklin Boulevard.

Chris Sherry, 22; Anne Howard, 18; Hannah Deutsch, 18; and Timothy Hromatka, 18, were arrested and charged with violating the state's disorderly conduct statute, McCarthy said.

McCarthy estimated 400 to 500 people took part in the protest Tuesday night, which started from the Federal Building, the site of an earlier rally where 51 demonstrators were arrested.

McCarthy said about 200 people marched onto the southbound lanes of

The sea of marchers grew to more than 2,000 strong by the time it turned onto 15th Avenue from Agate Street.

Interstate 5 about 10 p.m. Tuesday, closing all four lanes for about one hour.

EPD used tear gas to disperse the crowd, McCarthy said the arrested were charged under state law instead of municipal law to avoid any question of jurisdiction.

McCarthy said no one was injured in the incident.
