

PERSIAN GULF WAR

Jordan's King Hussein denounces coalition

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — King Hussein tilted sharply toward Iraq on Wednesday, describing the Persian Gulf War as an effort by outsiders to destroy that country and carve up the Arab world.

He called on Arabs and Muslims to "make the alliance accept a cease-fire."

"This is a war against all Arabs and Muslims and not only against Iraq," the king said in an emotional televised speech to his nation.

"The real purpose behind this destructive war ... is to destroy Iraq and rearrange the area," putting it under "foreign hegemony," said the king, who has been a bulwark of pro-Western moderation for his 37 years on the throne.

Without mentioning him by name, Hussein also tore into President Bush by denouncing Bush's claim the conflict is a "just war" fought to defend a new world order.

"The talk about a new world order whose early feature is the destruction of Iraq ... leads us to wonder about the identity of this order and instills in us doubts about its nature," the king said.

Bush immediately rejected the king's cease-fire call. Referring to Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, Bush said, "There will be nothing of that nature until this man commences a credible, unilateral withdrawal and then we'll see what happens."

King Hussein's speech echoed the strong pro-Iraqi sentiments of his 3.4 million subjects, many of whom are Palestinians.

Hussein's speech provoked deep concern in neighboring Israel. A government official called it "the most comprehensive and most aggressively pro-Iraqi speech" by Hussein since the beginning of the crisis. He said it was seen as signaling the end of Jordanian neutrality and a switch to complete support for Iraq.

Israel has worried about Jordan from the outset of the crisis, and has sent Hussein repeated public and private appeals to rein in the Muslim radicals who are gaining strength in his kingdom.

In his speech, the king used potent Arab and Muslim themes to lash the allied powers, and even more to denounce the Arabs fighting alongside them.

He singled out Saudi Arabia for special criticism: "When Arab and Islamic lands are offered as bases for the allied armies ... to launch attacks to destroy Muslim Iraq ... any Arab or Muslim can realize the magnitude of this crime committed against his religion and his nation."

BLACK & DECKER

Interested in a challenging business career in sales management or marketing?

"A Career with Black & Decker"

Meeting February 7th, 6-8pm at the EMU

Black and Decker, a world leader in the manufacturing and marketing of power tools and accessories, is seeking dynamic individuals who are looking for a challenging environment and a career that lets them put their skills to work.

Black and Decker's entry level sales representatives call on independent retail hardware stores to promote the sale of professional and consumer power tools, accessory and fastening, lawn and garden, and automotive products. Sales representatives also have the responsibility for managing advertising budgets and merchandising products at the store level.

What skills should a Black and Decker applicant demonstrate?

- Leadership
- Communication
- Creativity
- Organization
- Goal Oriented
- Confidence
- Self-Starter
- Inter-Personal Skills
- Highly Motivated

Applicant should be willing to relocate.

Black and Decker offers a competitive salary and benefits program as well as excellent potential for growth. We also offer the most extensive training program in the industry and a sales force that is ranked one of the top-ten in the industry by trade magazines.

To find out more on the opportunities Black and Decker has to offer, contact the Career Planning and Placement Center. Interviews occur February 19-20th at the Career Center.
