Budget hearings to begin for IFC Less funds available for groups in 1991-92 school year

The Incidental Fee Committee's 1991-92 budget hearings get under way tonight, beginning what promises to be a challenging season for both the IFC and the groups it funds. Although the committee has projected about a one-half million dollar decrease in available money, student groups are requesting an average 8.5 percent increase for the next academic year. University cutbacks, as a result of the passage of Measure 5, will include an enrollment cutback of about 2,000 students. Every student pays $100 per term in IFC money. As a result, the projected 1991-92 IFC income will be $4,291,400, as opposed to this school year's figure of $4,706,623. Last year, ASUO groups received a total of $1,314,451. (The Athletic Department, the EMU and EMU programs received the remaining funds. These groups will face potential cuts when their budget are heard in the spring.) This year, groups are requesting a total of $1,437,181 (See graphic at left).

office space rent or printing costs. He said he would likely not vote in favor of an increase for such things as salary raises. With tuition rising $200 to $300 per term next year, Morales said his main concern is that student incidental fees do not get raised as well. "I think it's going to be a very difficult year, and I don't want students to have to pay more fees," he said. IFC member Kari Anderson said she will be suggesting that groups combine their efforts in such areas as paying speaker fees, and that they put more emphasis on earning money through fundraisers.

"One of the things we tried to emphasize to the programs is 'come to us with some realistic figures,' because we would much rather have you make the cuts in the areas that you knew weren't as crucial," said Mike Colson, IFC chairman. "I don't think the budgets are unrealistic," he added. "I think the programs put forward what they thought they needed. We would like to provide for all these programs, but there's just not enough money. I think we have a lot of will, but we don't have the wallet to get it done."

"But the bottom line is that they will have to do more with less," she said. As far as determining budget allocations, Anderson said the committee will be "taking a hard look" at what services each group provides. Colson said he is looking forward to the beginning of budget hearings and hopes students will take an active interest in this year's budget hearings, to be held Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m. and Thursdays at 6:30 p.m. Check the EMU schedules posted throughout the building for the location.

Colson said he will be looking for several factors when determining whether a group's budget should be increased, decreased or remain the same. "We will look at what they've done in the past and what they plan to do in the future," Colson said. "It's really making sure that they've gotten out and tried to do something. We want to judge someone on the basis of student benefits, what the students get out of it, and how accessible those groups are," he added. "We will look at the program's needs and assess those needs." Armando Morales, now in his sixth year as an IFC member, said he will be reluctant to vote in favor of a group increase unless it is for essential reasons, such as an increase in

"You can read through a budget packet and try to get a semblance of what a group is about, but it's a wholly different thing when you have the program director and their members come in front of you and tell you about it. One of the unique things about this budget process is that we have public input," he said. "It's not like a faceless government making decisions in a far-off land. We have to face the students right here on campus. It allows us to deliberate these things in public, to the point where any student, and I highly encourage this, can come in and have a say in it, whether they're a member of the group or not."

College Bowl finals tonight

Eight teams will compete tonight in the finals of the University's College Bowl competition, beginning at 6 p.m. in the EMU Maple, Oak and Gumwood Rooms. The final two teams go head-to-head at 9 p.m. in the Gumwood Room.

come in with high numbers." She added that competitions generally draw a sizable audience as well.

The four players who finish with the highest individual scores will make up an all-star team and go on to the regional competition.

Faculty and staff at the University, as well as several community members, are donating their time to officiate, Pederson said.

During competitions earlier this month, the original field of 52 teams was narrowed to the final eight. Five of those teams are made up of students living in the dormitories. The other three are at-large groups.

The questions that are used in the competition come from the National College Bowl Company, and all universities and colleges who compete receive the same questions, she said.

"We have one of the largest campus College Bowl competitions in the nation," said Sue Pederson, director of the EMU Recreation Center, which sponsors the event. "We continually

Throughout the final rounds tonight, individual answers will be kept track of, so the four players who have answered the most questions correctly will make up the University all-star team and will then go to the regional competition, to be held this year in Corvallis. The winning team from that competition will go on to the nationals.

Last year, the University's team won the regional and went on to the nationals. Wednesday, February 13, 1991
