WED., APRIL 10
12:30 - 1:30 p.m.

Funny and moving reflections on how a transplanted Easterner and his family adjust to life on Bainbridge Island, Washington.

Out Here is a collection of Andrew Ward's humorous personal essays that track the Ward family's relocation from Connecticut to an island a ferry ride from Seattle. Many were first heard on National Public Radio's "All Things Considered" or read in magazines like The Atlantic. All reveal the sense of wonder and humor that have made Ward one of NPR's most popular personalities.

Andrew Ward is a former contributing editor at The Atlantic and the author of three previous books. He lives with his family on Bainbridge Island, near Seattle, Washington.

Come meet Andrew Ward, a popular and refreshing author, at the UO Bookstore on Wed., April 10, 12:30 - 1:30 p.m.
