took office May 25.

Barclay Grayson and Kari Anderson, the two previous members who voted against removing Colson, are no longer on the committee. Vilches previously voted in favor of removing Colson.

Both Lerma and Feig worked in the IFC this year, Feig as the debate was closed.

"I don't feel you have had a chance to listen to everything I have to say," Colson told members after the meeting. "This is based on insufficient information."

Warren disagreed, saying afterward that members have followed the situation closely.

"I spent hours agonizing over this," she said. "I didn't want to violate Mike's rights, edition of the Emerald, but the meeting date was listed as Monday rather than Saturday.

The Et al included a notice that internal business would be discussed.

"We knew there was going to be a vote," Warren said. "I don't know how (Colson) could have been surprised."

Colson said he will pursue the matter.

"I have nothing to hide," he said. "They cut me off because they didn't want to hear it. The truth is out there if people stop and look.

"Whether I'm on or off, this is an important matter to me, and now I know who's behind this," Colson said, referring to Lerma.

He has filed a complaint with the ASUO, asking for an investigation into recent changes in IFC documents. Lee has said he will look into the matter. The Jan. 31 minutes were changed by Lerma on May 6. In his complaint, Colson states that other changes in IFC records have taken place.

"You're going down, Lerma," Colson told her after the meeting.

Lerma said she did nothing wrong in modifying the minutes on May 6.

"I had that right as note taker to correct what had been altered," she said.

The IFC will meet again on Friday at 5 p.m. to discuss Colson, in addition to three special budgetary requests from student groups.

office manager, and both are familiar with the ongoing controversy surrounding the investigation. During Saturday's meeting, Colson asked how Dodge, Cruz and Warren could vote at that time without having heard his side of the story.

Dodge, Cruz and Warren said they have reviewed the investigation material, in addition to all subsequent documents from Colson and the court. Warren said members had discussed the matter "one-on-one" before Saturday but had never met together as a group.

Bailey and Lee attended the meeting after they heard Saturday morning that a vote was possible.

IFC members limited Colson's ability to comment at Saturday's meeting. Soon after Feig motioned to take a vote, but I felt confident when it was over and done with that we did the right thing. ... This committee cannot function with Mike on it."

Colson is not only angry that he was unable to address the issue entirely during Saturday's meeting, but that he was not informed in advance that the matter would even be addressed.

"This reeks of something called double jeopardy," Colson said. "It was done in an underhanded manner. I don't think this is fair. ... It was already resolved (by the previous committee)."

There is also some question as to whether the meeting and the vote are in violation of the Oregon Public Meetings Law, which requires a 24-hour public notice before meetings. An Et al was printed in Friday's
