'Terminator 2' offers message with action

★★★ 1/2
Terminator II: Judgment Day Playing at Springfield Cinemas and Cinema World. Rated R.

★ "Aren't I better." ★★ "I want to meet." ★★ "I want to see you." ★★ "I want to see you."

ADMIT ONE
I hate to gush, but believe me when I tell you to rush to the nearest theater — that's right, get out of the line for Problem Child 2 — and go immediately to see Terminator 2: Judgment Day.

This is a breathtaking, rowdy, breakneck paced science fiction/action/adventure movie as good as they get. On top of all that, it has a world peace message as a bonus.

Arnold Schwarzenegger returns as the perfect killing machine. You'll remember in The Terminator that the T-800 (Arnold) was sent back in time to kill the mother of the man who would lead an armed resistance against the machines who battled the humans after the nuclear holocaust.

The mother survived and has her child. Now, another cyborg has been sent back to the present time to kill the child himself. But it's not the T-800. It is the T-1000, a form-changing liquid metal terminator who can change into just about anything of equal size to himself: another person, a floor, or long, sharp, metal objects. He is played with fearsome relentlessness by Robert Patrick.

Schwarzenegger plays another T-800. This time, he is sent by the resistance to protect John Connor, now 10 years old. Once again, Schwarzenegger plays the emotionless role with great believability. This is not a snide comment. To go through two hours without emotion is
