ic, of course.) As you drink beers you discard the empties by throwing them at anyone you see frisbee golfing. You can take into consideration how thoughtful they are of others, but it is not necessary. The game is over when the beer is gone or when all the golfers disappear.

The game is scored as follows:

- One point earned for every beer consumed while playing.
- Three points earned for every frisbee golfer hit below the neck with an empty beer can.
- Four points earned for every frisbee golfer hit above the neck with an empty beer can.

Bonus points:

- Five points for keeping the empty in hand and repeatedly beating any golfer with it.
- A whopping 10 points for any frisbee golfer who is taken away by stretcher.

Obviously, the scores made early in the contest before the frisbee-armed athletes are aware of your presence will be the easiest. These first few hits can be achieved by nonchalantly walking up to the golfers and walloping them. The beginning of the contest will be characterized by close-range, direct hits.

But the real sporting challenge of the event will come when the brave golfers who remain devoted to their calling try to finagle their way to the end of the course. Premeditation and stealth will compete with brute arm strength to see who can get the most hits in the closing beers (non-alcoholic, of course) of the competition.

The most important quality needed to be successful at frisbee golfer golf is a complete lack of conscience or respect for anyone but yourself — much like midafternoon frisbee golfers themselves.

And remember, if anyone complains about your new-found hobby, just tell them, "Hey dude, don't be so anal-retentive. It's just a game, man."
