Lobbying, involvement on calendar of ASUO execs

By Daralyn Trappe
Emerald Associate Editor

In late August, as they were getting ready to take on nine months of work, ASUO President Jennifer Bills and Vice President JoSonja Watson met with the Oregon Daily Emerald to talk about everything from getting tattoos to being sent to the principal's office in grade school.

Bills, 22, a fifth-year English major, is a graduate of Marshfield High School in Coos Bay and plans to graduate at the end of spring term.

"After I graduate I think I'm going to have to find a job in this town which, being an English major, is not going to be easy, because everyone's an English major," Bills said. "I either want to do something I love, like work in human rights, or I want a job that allows me to work with human rights after work. So that job would have to allow me the economic freedom and time to do that."

JoSonja Watson, 20, a junior pre-major, graduated from Sunset High School in Beaverton. Watson is considering a future in management, she said.

"But I've thought about going into social fields, too," she said. "Whatever comes I'll take it and if I'm happy, I'll stay there."

ODE: How did you get involved in student government?

Jennifer Bills: My political activism started in sixth grade when I started an underground newspaper and ended up going
