Little garden plots, available for rent through the Community Gardens program, are available for a cost of $36 to $25, along with a small deposit. In addition, gardeners can have access to a shed full of tools for a $7 fee.

been too good because of the cold spring weather," he said.

Working on his garden almost every day during the spring paid off for Chen, who now can relax while harvesting tomatoes, strawberries, peppers and kale.

"It's almost as expensive as you'd buy in Safeway, in terms of labor, but we enjoy just being out here," he said.

Gardens outside of student housing complexes are the most popular, said Mardi Klotz, the receptionist for River House, 301 N. Adams St., where the garden program is based.

"The gardens by Amazon and Westmoreland housing are usually full. About half the spaces are available in the spring," Klotz said.

Chen stood in line to get his plot by Westmoreland, but Irina Wilborn, who also lives in Westmoreland, could only get into the garden at Amazon. Wilborn is happy to have a plot anywhere.

"I like to work with the soil. If you're overstressed, it's so relaxing," she said.

Wilborn is from the Soviet Union, where she grew vegetables out of necessity, but she now gardens for enjoyment.

Wilborn said she spent more money on the garden than she would have buying her produce, but she doesn't mind.

"Of course you lose money, but it's fun just to be in the open air and get a suntan," she said.

All unreserved plots are open for rental every spring. There are five gardens in Eugene and a small or large plot can be rented in each.

A full plot is 20 by 30 feet and costs $36 per year, with a $10 deposit. Half plots are 20 by 15 feet and rent for $25, with a $5 deposit. For a $7 fee, gardeners can also have access to a shed full of tools.

For the budget-conscious, plots can be rented at half price after July 1. David Cothrin, manager of Down to Earth garden center, said many crops can still be planted late in the year.

"There's a lot you can do," he said. "A lot of fall crops like broccoli, cauliflower, kale, fall peas and garlic can be planted. Garlic actually does better in the fall."
