one hilarious moment after another as Jerry does his send-up of the Jekyll-and-Hyde story as a bumbling chemistry teacher who stumbles onto a potion that transforms him into the lounge lizard sensation Buddy Love. He becomes the hip man around campus and arouses Stella Stevens. Absolutely hilarious.

5: Back To School — Rodney Dangerfield does the only role he can do well — the happy-go-lucky rich slob who throws his money around. This time he enters college to convince his son that the path to greatness is paved with a good education. He gets to have a fabulous scene where he tells a particularly annoying know-it-all professor where to get off. What other movie can boast an appearance by Professor Sam Kinison?

4: Kent State — This picture vividly recreates the events that led to the National Guard opening fire on a group of war protesters in 1970, killing four and injuring nine. Our parties get tear-gassed by the Eugene Police Department. But it's all relative, isn't it?

3: Any one movie by Fellini, Goddard or Bergman — This will impress your professors, parents and upper-classmates. You'll look intelligent regardless of whether you really are. Extra credit if you can quote lines or scenes and create a hidden meaning to them.

2: Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure — Watch and learn how to imitate the behavior shown in this movie, because after one term of Literature in Victorian England, you'll never be as witty or engaging as these guys are. This is what you lose by being educated.

1: Animal House — What else? Filmed extensively on this very campus, this is still the funniest movie ever made about college life. You'll probably never have this much fun, but so what? It would probably kill you anyway. John Belushi is at his peak and the laughs are non-stop. A great film while guzzling beer.
