Get involved with city committees

If you've ever wanted to be part of the solution, here's your opportunity.

The City of Eugene is looking for interested citizens to fill up to 70 seats on over 20 different citizen boards, commissions and committees. These groups advise city staff members and make recommendations to the City Council on issues ranging from cultural services and human rights to public safety and business development.

"A lot of times, these committees or commissions have specific tasks, while others handle issues as they come up," said Phil Weiler, Public Information Specialist for the City Manager's Office.

The Human Rights Commission, for example, works with city officials to ensure that the city is providing equal opportunities to all citizens. In addition, the group cooperates with the State Bureau of Labor and other governmental agencies in receiving, referring and investigating specific acts of discrimination.

The Riverfront Research Park Commission, conducts research, holds hearings, studies, investigates, analyzes and makes evaluations of proposals concerning development for the Riverfront Research Park property. Four of the members are selected by University President Myles Brand and the other three are nominated by Eugene Mayor Jeff Miller.

"In every case where (the Riverfront Research Park Commission) has made a recommendation, it's been accepted," said Cathy Briner, deputy director of Planning and Development for the city. "Their advise is taken very seriously."

The Eugene Cultural Affairs Commission advises the City Council on policy matters and the City Manager and the Performing Arts director of operation matters regarding the Hult Center for the Performing Arts.

Each group has a different requirement for length of service. Members of the Human Rights Commission, for example, are appointed for three year terms, while members of the Riverfront Research Park Commission serve for two years.

The appointment process also varies. The City Council appoints most members, but some are nominated first by the mayor and some are appointed directly by the mayor. Those appointed begin their terms in January.

Application are available at the City Manager's office in City Hall, 777 Pearl St., Room 105, or call 687-5010 for more details. Forms must be turned in Friday, Oct. 4 at 5 p.m.

Weiler said the application process is "very basic" with just a 1-page form to fill out.
