Frohnmayer decision on hold

Attorney General tends to comatose daughter

By Carrie Dennett
Emerald Associate Editor

The question of whether Oregon Attorney General Dave Frohnmayer will be University's next law school dean is likely to remain unanswered for at least the next week or two.

The search committee completed its official task earlier this month when it recommended to University President Myles Brand that Frohnmayer be offered the position.

"It's all in the hands of the president now," said James Reinmuth, Dean of the College of Business Administration and head of the search committee. "Our work is done, unless Mr. Frohnmayer says no."

He said Frohnmayer is not likely to make a decision right now because of the failing health of one of his daughters.

"Dave Frohnmayer has said 'I am interested, and I'll get back to you after I see to my family,'" Reinmuth said.

The condition of Frohnmayer's 12-year-old daughter, Katie, has deteriorated in the past few days. She slipped into a coma Sunday at Eugene's Sacred Heart General Hospital, where she is listed in critical condition.

Katie suffered a stroke Aug. 3 in Salt Lake City, Utah while visiting the city with her parents. She was transferred to Sacred Heart Aug.

27 when her condition was judged fit for travel.

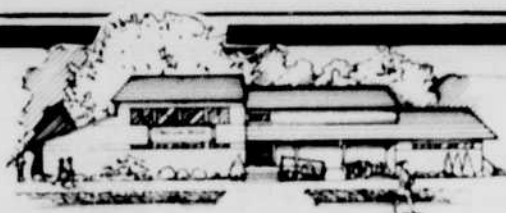

Katie suffers from Fanconi's anemia, a rare and often fatal bone marrow disease. The Frohnmayers' extensive search for a compatible donor for a marrow transplant has been unsuccessful.

"I expect that in a couple of weeks Mr. Frohnmayer and President Brand will sit down and discuss the question of the dean position," Reinmuth said. President Brand is making no comments at this time.

"Our hope is that if Mr. Frohnmayer accepts the position, that he will come on board in January or February, sometime around the beginning of the year," Reinmuth said. "I would hope he would accept, and I think he might, but he has a lot of other options to consider."

Frohnmayer agreed to be considered as a successor to current Dean Maurice Holland in a letter sent to the University Aug. 29. The next week, five of the 11 other candidates removed themselves from contention.

If Frohnmayer declines the University's offer, the search committee will go back to work to find a dean from the other candidates before September 1992. Reinmuth said he expects that the five candidates will jump back into consideration.
