but one of the main attractions of the Beer Garden is the live music.

"We are very selective about the bands we contract to perform at the Beer Garden in that we try to give patrons a variety of ways thought about playing at the University someday, and now we are," said guitarist Tom Hemphill, adding that until recently, the band has been playing the Portland circuit more than the local scene.

bands, each with their own sound," said Christine Baker, regional concert coordinator for the Beer Garden. "They must be playable."

To satisfy the campus' diverse community, bands are picked from all over the West Coast to render the blues, rock 'n' roll, and even jazz.

Heading the entertainment this evening is a local rock 'n' roll group, Red Over White, whose first performance tonight at the Beer Garden marks a milestone for the 4 member band.

"Living here in this campus community, we've al-sages about faith, hope and the power of love, Red Over White (their name was adopted from a Susie and the Banshee's song) hopes their performance will earn them two more shows at the University.

With their yen for redefined, creative music, Red Over White, with singer Matt Morgan, bassist Dana Axon, drummer Bill Black, and Hemphill, will be dishing up mostly original compositions from 5-7 p.m. tonight.

"The entertainment is free, it doesn't interfere with your studies, so just take time out to kickback a little," Baker said.
