and Europe.

Besides his international recognition, Broekhoff also received a favorable reputation among University colleagues and students, Osternig said.

"Everyone is still reacting in their own way," he said. "People are saddened by the loss of a truly great professional in our field. He was a fantastic teacher. His course evaluations were as good as I've ever seen. He was a tremendous teacher and a tremendous colleague."

Broekhoff is survived by his wife, Marna; and sons, Derik, Christopher and Alex.

The family asks that remembrances be contributions to Sacred Heart General Hospital's cancer care unit or the International Institute for Sports and Human Performance in care of the University Foundation.

MEDRANO

gest memories of the ordeal is when a soldier once took him out of prison to complain of the trouble he was causing. Medrano said the soldier showed him a thick stack of papers and said, "These are the protests around the world I have received just because you are here."

His release finally came after repeated inquiries from the International Red Cross.

Medrano said he feels very fortunate to have been able to leave prison.

"It's nothing short of a miracle if (a) person walks out of prison alive," he said.

Medrano said Salvadoran prison doors should be emblazoned with the words from Dante's Inferno — "Ye who enter here should give up all hope."
