Gus Van Sant makes a big bold leap to join Jim Jarmusch and the Coen brothers in the front ranks of America's most innovative independent film makers. The film itself is invigorating - written, directed and acted with enormous insight and comic élan. — Vincent Canby, N.Y. TIMES

★★★★ Exceptional . . . so delightfully different and daring that it renews your faith. — Marshall Fine, GANNETT NEWS SERVICE

"A tenderly comical and beautiful piece of work."

Los Folkloristas bring age-old Mexican tunes to Eugene Hult Center

S-H-O-W-T-I-M-E
MUSIC: Los Folkloristas, a Mexican folk music band, will perform at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, Oct. 30, in the Hult Center's Silva Concert Hall. Tickets are $15 and $10, and are available at the EMU Main Desk or by calling the box office at 687-5000. Limited discounts are available for children, students and seniors.

A group that has enjoyed 25 years of success, is considered one of the most important and influential bands in Latin America, and has performed over 2,000 concerts on three continents — all of this describes Los Folkloristas.

But it is also a band that has never lost touch with its purpose.

Rosalinda Reynoso, a 12-year member of Los Folkloristas, said that its purpose is to preserve the history and traditions of Latin American music and bring a message of peace and understanding to its audiences.

"As people learn about us through our music, we learn about them," Reynoso said. "We can achieve an understanding in this way and learn to respect each other."

The music of the seven-member group is also a celebration of the rich diversity of sounds heard throughout Latin America. "It's surprising how much the songs change from one region to another," Reynoso said. "There's an enormous variety even within one country. We try to show a little bit of every place."

Band members travel throughout Mexico and Central and South America, where they learn songs from village elders and regional campesino musicians. Some of the songs are even performed in native Latin American languages such as
