HAUNTED HAPPENINGS

Halloween rooted in old traditions

Halloween has been with us for a long time and has been a part of our traditions since 600 A.D. when Christians celebrated the Mass of All Saints Day. Since then, it has evolved into a popular American celebration.

All Saints' Day, also known as All-Hallows Day, takes place on Nov. 1, which began as a festival for the dead. The celebration recognized all known and unknown saints and martyrs of the Catholic Church who did not have their own day on the ecclesiastical calendar in the seventh century.

All Soul's Day is Nov. 2, a day that was once celebrated by pagans as a festival for the dead. On this day, the Christians prayed for the souls of the dead that had not been sufficiently purified, with the hope that the prayers would help.

Halloween is the eve of Nov. 1 when the separation between the living and the dead is less distinct, and ghosts, witches and clairvoyants are prowling about.

The tradition of trick-or-treating is a relatively new American

A child born on Halloween is supposed to have a second sight and be able to interpret things in dreams.

addition. It may have originated from the Gaelic practice of giving cakes to the poor at the end of summer, which was a festival that coincided with All Soul's Day. The cakes that were given were called "soul-cakes" and, in return, the poor were expected to pray for a good harvest.

Another popular Halloween tradition is bobbing for apples. The apples are put in a tub of water and the person playing the "game" is expected to catch an apple in their teeth without using their hands.

Popular superstition says that one can find his or her future spouse on Halloween night. A good mate-finding method is to put names on the apples and the name on the apple caught will be the spouse.

One can also find a mate by walking around the house three times or around town with a mouthful of water. The first person of the opposite sex seen will be the future spouse.

Another popular belief states that a child born on Halloween is supposed to have a second sight and be able to interpret things in dreams.

Halloween tradition may even lend a hand if one is interested in knowing the future. Melt some lead on Halloween night and pour it from an iron spoon into cold water. The shape that is created will be a representation of the future life.

A lot of history and tradition makes Halloween what it is today. Much more than partying and eating tons of candy, it represents years of tradition and folklore. Have fun and try some of these popular superstitions. Who knows — you may just find the right person on this ghoulish night!
