Speakers to focus on East Europe

By Kirsten Lucas
Emerald Reporter

Well-known East European dissidents and diplomats will speak at the University today and Saturday as part of a free two-day public symposium titled "New Political Cultures: Economics, Gender and Society."

The symposium will cover the post-communist transformation of society in Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland and will focus on the effects of economic and political change on the people of these countries.

Rita Klimova, Czech and Slovak Federal Republic ambassador to the United States, will explore the effect of the transition to a market economy on society, morality and culture in her lecture titled "Czechoslovakia and the New Europe." She will speak tonight at 8 in the EMU Fir Room.

After spending more than 20 years of her life as a political dissident, Klimova became a foreign diplomat under the revolutionary government of President Vaclav Havel.

Eniko Bollobas, charge d'affaires of the Hungarian Embassy in Washington, D.C., and former University visiting professor, will talk about "Women, Politics and the New Society in Hungary." She will speak in the EMU Fir Room today at 3:30 p.m.

Bollobas will discuss the direction of change in Hungary and explore how a new society is created through symbols, actions and words. She will also discuss how women are affected by the post-communist transition and how women have become actors in forming their own future.

Bollobas, a human-rights activist and prominent figure in the Hungarian Women's Movement, is a professor of American Studies at the University of Budapest.

On Saturday, Jan Kubik, assistant professor of political science at Rutgers University, will present a slide-illustrated lecture on "Culture and the Post-Communist Transformation of Local Politics in Poland" at 10:30 a.m. in Room 110 Willamette.

Kubik, a native of Poland, recently returned from a one-year stay in a small Polish town where he studied the cultural and political changes brought about by the victory of Solidarity.

The symposium will conclude with a panel discussion on "The New Political Cultures." Klimova, Bollobas and Kubik will be joined by Joel Marrant, Linfield College associate professor of anthropology; Linda Fuller, University assistant professor of sociology; and Joseph Fiszman, University professor emeritus of political science.

Hatred topic of ASUO symposium

By Daralyn Trappe
Emerald Associate Editor

The 1991 ASUO fall symposium, which gets under way Saturday, will be a week in which students can become educated about hate-based bigotry and violence, with discussions and workshops focusing on such issues as racism, sexism and homophobia.

The topic of this year's symposium resulted from a weekend in early October when several assaults occurred in the West University neighborhood, said ASUO Programs Coordinator Therese DuBravac.

"The ASUO decided that one of the things we wanted to do is take a pro-active stance against not only hate crimes that are racially motivated, but against all kinds of violence, whether it's motivated by race, gender, sexual orientation, whatever," DuBravac said.

"We wanted to start educating students as well as the community and start building a coalition between the University and the community, so that we can start preventing and eventually eliminating these types of problems," she said.

The panels and workshops will identify the historical roots of the problems, help people learn how to recognize hate oriented behavior in their own lives as well as identifying that kind of behavior in institutions and the community, said Student Sen. Brian Hoop, one of the symposium's organizers.

"The one key that I'm really trying to stress to people who are presenting during this panel is using the symposium as a catalyst for students to encourage more students to get involved in existing anti-hate movements in Eugene," Hoop said.

"It's one thing for students to say they're against racism or homophobia but it's another thing to put those words into action," he said. "Unless students are actively working against hate violence and bigotry they are implicitly condoning it."

The following is an overview of each day's events:

SATURDAY and SUNDAY —

• Racism workshop Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the EMU Gumwood Room. Pre-registration is required for this workshop. Call the ASUO at 346-3724 or stop by the office in EMU Suite 1.

MONDAY —

• Anti-Semitism panel at 1:30 p.m. in the EMU Ben Linder Room. A panel of members from the Jewish Student Union with faculty and community members will speak about Jewish culture and anti-Semitism in our society.

• Multicultural curriculum organizing meeting at 7:30 p.m. in the EMU Ben Linder Room. This will be an organizing meeting for students who want to create a stronger ethnic studies program at the University, increase minority faculty recruitment and retention and build a stronger race, gender, ethnic requirement.

TUESDAY —

• Stop the Violence March at 5:30 p.m. beginning in the EMU Courtyard.

"From the courtyard, we'll be going around to campus and off-campus areas and we'll be stopping at four sites which have had previous incidents of some sort of violent act," DuBravac said.

• Community forum on hate violence at 7 p.m. in Room 110 Willamette. The forum is designed to provide an opportunity for dialogue between the campus community and the Eugene-Springfield residents on how these two groups can work together to stop violence in the community.

WEDNESDAY —

• Disabilities panel from 3 to 5 p.m. in EMU Cedar Room A. A panel of students and administrators will address the needs and rights of people with disabilities.
