Wounded Ducks ready for hapless Beavers

By Jake Berg
Emerald Sports Editor

It has been a miserable season for both Oregon and Oregon State's football teams, and Saturday's Civil War matchup should put one team out of its misery, if nothing else.

Not much is at stake besides tradition and bragging rights in the 1 p.m. contest at Autzen Stadium between the two intra-state rivals. The game does, however, give both teams a shot at changing the perspective of how the season might be looked back upon.

"It's a must-win game for both programs," Oregon offensive coordinator Mike Bellotti said. "It's a chance to end the season on a positive note."

"I think it would take away a little bit of the bad taste," Oregon defensive coordinator Denny Schuler said.

Oregon State offensive coordinator Mike Summers said a win in Saturday's Civil War game would mean the world to the Beaver fans, players and coaches.

"A victory in this game would erase a lot of the frustration in a really long year," Summers said. "This game means everything to us."

But the Civil War was not billed to be such a contest before the season. While Oregon was celebrating its second consecutive bowl appearance last December, the Beavers were celebrating the absence of former coach Dave Kragthorpe.

Kragthorpe was run out of town after his pass-oriented offense won only one game last year, and Jerry Pettibone was hired from Northern Illinois with his triple-option-style offense. The new system has not worked instant wonders, though, as the first-year coach is off to an 0-10 start.

Oregon's overall mark is not much more impressive at 3-7, but expectations, while at a low for Oregon State, were very high for the Ducks this year. Injuries can be mostly to blame for Oregon's drop in its level of play after the opening two wins.

"We've got a lot of respect for Oregon," Pettibone said. "I felt they were one of the top 25 teams in the nation after their first two games."

Injuries have had a contributing role in the path that Oregon State's season has taken, too. Four different quarterbacks have taken snaps for the Beavers this year, and who will be in the Oregon State pocket Saturday is also questionable.

Walk-on tailback Donovan Moore is likely to lead the Oregon rushing attack in place of Sean Burwell. The game against Oregon State starts at 1 p.m. Saturday at Autzen Stadium.

Ed Browning, the only non-freshman Beaver quarterback, is fighting for the starting spot with Sedrick Thomas. Freshmen Ian Shields and Mark Olford have both started at quarterback, but injuries have their status for Saturday listed as questionable.

Oregon's quarterback situation, too, is undetermined as of yet. Brett Salisbury put up some good passing numbers at UCLA last week, but he made some crucial mistakes that may cost him the starting job.

Bob Brothers, who started at Arizona State, suffered a calf injury in that game, keeping him out of last weekend's contest. He has practiced this week, and if Brothers did start Saturday, it would be the seventh consecutive time a different Oregon quarterback has started.

"Maybe I'll keep my quarterback starter a secret until gametime, too, because it'll really confuse their defense won't it?" Oregon coach Rich Brooks said Wednesday.

Brooks has been "impressed" with the play of the Oregon State defense this year, he said, but statistically, the Beavers' defense is right where its offense is — the Pac-10 basement.

Oregon State's 206.9 yards a game is last in the country, and their defense's allowance of 412.9 yards a game is last in the conference. The Beavers' pass defense is particularly weak, which is of a concern to Pettibone, considering Salisbury passed 46 times last weekend.

Bellotti put the ball in the air so many times last week because of a beat-up Oregon running game, but he is not necessarily planning on throwing the ball so many times against Oregon State despite the Beavers' pass defense.

"I hope not," Bellotti said, "but then I don't know who's starting at quarterback yet."

The Oregon running game, ranked last in the conference with only 115.4 yards a game, has limped through the last eight games. Star tailback Sean Burwell has not been the same since an ankle injury after the second week, and starting fullback Juan Shedrick had to sit out last week at UCLA as well.

That left walk-on tailback Donovan Moore to carry much of the rushing load, and the junior has had some bright spots in place of Burwell, who is again questionable this week. The Ducks, however, have missed Burwell tremendously, going 1-8 since his injury.

GAME NOTES — Brooks, a graduate of Oregon State, is 12-1-1 against his alma mater. The Beavers' 15-game losing streak is the longest in the nation. The Beavers' last win at Autzen Stadium was a 17-14 victory in 1973. Of Oregon State's 98 players on its roster, 52 are freshmen.
