

Carter's labor secretary to talk about recession tonight

In the face of the current recession, the United States is going to have to make some tough choices along the way to recovery. One of the leaders in the national movement for broader work force development policies has a few ideas of his own.

Ray Marshall, economist, author, teacher and former secretary of labor under President Jimmy Carter will discuss U.S. economic development strategies in a free speech tonight at 7 in the Wilder Room of the Eugene Conference Center at the Hilton, 66 E. 6th Ave.

Marshall's talk, "A High-Wage Strategy for Economic Development," will focus on the need for the United States to adopt a "high quality, high wage, high skills" approach similar to the ones being used by Japan and Europe.

Marshall is co-author of the book America's Choice — High Skills or Low Wages. The book examines the issues of education and training in the United States, and was produced as a report of the findings of the U.S. Commission on Skills of the American Work Force, which Marshall co-chaired in 1989-90.

Marshall was U.S. secretary of labor from 1977 to 1981. He holds the Audre and Bernard Rapoport Centennial Chair in Economics and Public Affairs at the University of Texas at Austin. He is co-author of 25 books and numerous scholarly articles.

Marshall is the 10th occupant of the University's Wayne Morse Chair of Law and Politics, and will co-teach a University class in labor and economic policy during winter term.

The Wayne Morse Chair was created in 1978 as a living memorial to the late Oregon senator and former dean of the University School of Law. The Occupant is selected by the University president "on the basis of qualities and achievements exemplified in the life of Wayne L. Morse: courage, integrity, independence, teaching ability, statesmanship, scholarship and contributions to the enhancement of law, representative government and world peace."

Psychology prof dies

Fred Attneave, a University professor emeritus of psychology, died at age 72 on Dec. 24. He was a specialist in perception and learning, and was a University faculty member from 1958-1985.

A memorial service is scheduled from 2-5 p.m. Sunday, Jan. 12, in the Gerlinger Alumni Lounge.

Sue Hamilton, assistant to the head of the psychology department, said that donations in Attneave's memory can be made to Planned Parenthood or the the University Foundation, designated for the Fred Attneave Endowment Fund.

The fund supports an annual lecture series sponsored by the Department of Psychology and the Institute of Cognitive and Decision Sciences.

Collaboration planned

University President Myles

Brand and the president of Portland State are planning an accredited professional education program for architects in Portland.

The planned program could place Portland on the list of major cities nationwide where it is possible to obtain an accredited architecture education. It also represents a major response to needs identified last year by the Governor's Commission on Higher Education for the Portland Metropolitan Area.

Detailed planning for the new program, including a proposed opening date, will begin soon, said Brand and Portland State President Judith Ramaley.

"This splendid initiative makes good sense for a variety of reasons," Brand said. "It creates a much-needed new professional program for the Portland area.

"And, because we are drawing on the existing strengths of two great universities, we are ensuring wise and efficient use of Oregon's scarce public higher education resources."

Jerry Finrow, dean of the University's School of Architecture and Allied Arts, said "we are pleased to be able to assist in supporting a unique program tailored to special needs of the Portland Area."

The planning committee has also been mandated with examining post-professional architecture education in the Portland area, creating opportunities for students from participating institutions to assist in housing and neighborhood projects, and establishing a Master's degree in architecture.
