QUESTION:

Do you believe public officials should be held accountable for their private lives?

"I think there are some issues that happen in a person's private life that we should take into consideration because if those views are shown in private they're going to be shown in public."

--Kimberley Lockamy
senior, business

"Yes. You handle a large amount of public money that is considered public and is accountable. That accountability means you should be held to the same credibility factors as anyone else."

--James McCafferty
junior, journalism

"Yes, because if they're dishonest in their private lives they might be dishonest in whatever they are doing in business, so it's important."

--RoseMarie Beatty
junior, journalism

"I don't think so. Everybody has the right to privacy, including the public official."

--Di Wei
graduate, physics

"I think their current private life should be part of (their public life) if it pertains to their job. I think there are some details in their past, their college years of drug use or whatever, that aren't important."

--Kerri Lynn Redfield
junior, English

"Yes, because they are working for all the people so all the people should know who they're employing. I think you should know everything about them that you can."

--Richard Krewson
senior, finance

Student throws hat in mayoral ring

By Gerrit Koepping and Hope Neilson

A University student who announced his plans to run for mayor in the upcoming election said he wants to turn Eugene into a "Death Star."

At a press conference Wednesday in the EMU Courtyard, 20-year-old Mark Russell announced his outrageous campaign platform, which includes a plan to move the city of Eugene to a space station like the Death Star in Star Wars, but "only tougher."

"After all, the last Death Star got its butt kicked," he said. "And I wouldn't want that to happen to our fine city."

Russell made his passion for Eugene clear.

"This city is the milk that makes this cat purr," he said.

One vision Russell said he has for Eugene is a program he calls "hot spuds and warm hugs for all homeless."

Russell, a junior history major, said the plan would use potatoes to feed the homeless.

"They're the obvious food-stuff of choice for the homeless," he said. "And they're scrumdilyicious."

Mark Russell, the guy without the glasses, promises to move Eugene to a "Death Star" if elected mayor.

Russell challenged one of his opponents in the race, Ruth Bascom, to a debate.

"I will start addressing real issues as soon as she starts addressing them," Russell said.

Bascom said she would accept his challenge.

Bascom said three of her platforms include addressing the affordable housing issue, keeping the Hult Center, and scrapping the downtown fountain.

On the issue of opening the Eugene Mall to traffic, Russell was evasive.

"The opening of the downtown mall would open up to traffic those areas that were once closed to traffic," Russell said.

Other campaign promises Russell made were to forcefully annex Santa Clara, the town of Veneta and the Ukraine republic "to make Eugene bigger."
