Joint Forces Dance Company co-founder Alito Alessi and workshop participant Emery Blackwell explore expression through dance in the Danceability workshop for the able-bodied and physically challenged.

Workshop promotes dance for all

By Jacqueline Woge
Emerald Contributor

Beyond the immediate subjects, the background extends like a savannah and the event is like a wildlife film - herds on the Serengeti of Africa with different animals grazing and interacting peacefully, young ones tripping through the foreground, encounters, withdrawals, peripheral activities.

Spasmodically, grotesquely, Emery humped over to Dana. Pete's excitement was contagious. Bruce called the large group to order every so often. Pete was lifted into the air by four dancers and soon was smiling down at us as they paraded by.

At least that was how Steve Paxton, a former principal dancer with the Merce Cunningham Dance Company, viewed one part of the 1991 Danceability Workshop. You may see similar images during the video "Common Ground," a presentation that weaves in footage from the 1988 workshop.

The video, along with a demonstration, discussion and performance, will be Friday, March 13 at 7 p.m. at the Hilyard Community Center, 2580 Hilyard St. The evening provides an icebreaking introduction to this unique five-day workshop on a unique form of dance, contact improvisation.

Contact improvisation is a movement form in which two or more people move together, sharing weight and balance.
