decide in which areas they excel and which skills to use to their advantage.

To get the most out of the Career Fair students should decide if they want to approach specific employers or play the field. Students might also want to research the demand in fields they are curious about.

When actually speaking with corporation representatives, students might want to demonstrate some prior knowledge in the desired field and ask questions which demonstrate that knowledge.

Asking about summer jobs or internships available at a particular corporation is certainly encouraged, as are questions regarding relevant coursework the student might take to prepare for a job. Try asking about the corporation's expectations of change in the company so you can anticipate and prepare before actually looking for full-time work.

Above all, it is important to keep in mind that the corporations are here for students.

Allow enough time to take advantage of this introductory opportunity to probe possible employers. After all, don't they say first impressions last?
