Ducks end disability week on a roll

By Marion Suitor
Emerald Contributor

The ASUO's "Discover the Ability in Disability" awareness week came to a climax Thursday night as the Oregon basketball teams took on the Sacred Heart's Oregon Rehabilitation Center in the "Ducks on a Roll" wheelchair basketball contest.

The ORC Rolling Thunder women's team and the Low Riders men's team defeated the Oregon basketball teams in the third annual game.

The Rolling Thunder team beat Oregon's women 19-8 in the twenty-minute first half. The Rolling Thunder team was led by Susie Grimes, a team member for 12 years. She said Thursday night's Rolling Thunder team was thrown together at the last minute, but the team interaction was still tight enough to lead the team to victory.

Oregon guard Missy Stowell, a veteran to the Ducks on a Roll game, found the competition to be a challenge.

'It's frustrating and difficult to go out on the court and play defense. The other team really showed us how to play.'

"It's frustrating and difficult to go out on the court and play defense. The other team really showed us how to play," she said.

In previous years, the women's teams played only a half-time exhibition game, but they received such a favorable response that this year the teams played the first half of the game.

Thursday's 25-21 victory for the Low Rider Men's team marked the third win for the ORC team. "It was a tough game," said Oregon's Jeff Potter, "but I enjoyed it."

The men's team travels extensively around the nation to play other wheelchair basketball teams. Larry Craig, a player for the Low Riders for 14 years, said that the players not only learn basketball skills while traveling with the team, but they also learn lifestyle skills that help them adjust to being in a wheelchair.

The halftime show featured an exhibition game by the ORC Eugene Bandits quad rugby team and the third annual celebrity game. Members of the University faculty defeated Eugene's radio and television celebrities.

The proceeds from the annual Ducks on a Roll wheelchair basketball game will go to support the University Services for students with Disabilities and the ORC sports program at Sacred Heart Hospital.
