ly 41 percent of the money allocated by the IFC. In addition to the EMU budget, the IFC allocated 1992-93 budgets to six groups.

At Thursday's meeting, ASUO Legal Services was unanimously allocated $70,539, for a 5.7 percent decrease from this year's $74,807. However, IFC Chairwoman Lydia Lerma raised intent to reconsider the budget just before she stormed out of the hearing, which was tension-filled from beginning to end Lerma said she wanted to see an even bigger cut in the group's budget, and was frustrated when IFC members Harris, Ann Feig and Sara Dodge wouldn't go along with it.

Legal services asked the IFC for an increase in staff salaries comparable to other local and state agencies offering similar services; The IFC asked Legal Services to make do with less, particularly during the summer months.

Thursday night was the second time Legal Services had its budget reviewed by the IFC, and it looks like it will be considered a third time.

At Wednesday's meeting, the IFC allocated $20,381 to three groups.

Disabled Student Services requested and received $10,100 for its 1992-93 IFC budget, representing no change from this year's program subsidy. The ASUO went along with the zero percent increase in its recommendation.

The Committee for Musical Arts also requested a zero percent increase from the IFC Wednesday. However, CMA members were very good-natured about the 3 percent decrease they received. CMA received $4,675 this year and next year will have a budget of $4,535.

CMA representatives told the IFC that they understand the IFC's position and the need to keep fees from rising.

The Oregon Commentator magazine got its way with the IFC Wednesday night. The Commentator will receive $5,845 next year, for a 1 percent increase over this year's budget.

In the course of discussion about the Commentator, which prides itself on its conservative content. Harris reminded fellow IFC members: "A little deviance is good for the University.'

The Commentator requested $5,845, and the ASUO recommended the IFC grant that request. The IFC budget analyst recommended a 6.9 percent decrease for the Commentator, which is typical of his conservative recommendations.

The following figures from Tuesday's meeting were provided by the IFC: The YWCA received $2,881 for a 5.6 percent decrease from this year's $3053 budget. The Department of Educational Policy and Management Graduate Students Organization was allocated a budget of $607 for a 29 percent decrease from this year's $824 budget. The IFC allocated itself $11,034 for a 5 percent decrease from this year's $11,543 budget.

ence it, the next time you will be reluctant to do it."

But Yuan does not believe activism in China is over. He just thinks it will come from a younger generation. Many of the people who were involved in 1989 have gone underground or escaped. The official government line on the massacre is that it didn't happen - reflected in the state-designed textbooks. But Yuan said that denial may work against the govern-

Now a senior majoring in business at the University, Yuan met a woman from Eugene around that time and moved here two years ago when they decided to get married. After graduation, he wants to work for an Oregon corporation doing business in China.

Yuan said his friends in China now tend to focus on economic reforms more than political change

China has regarded the United States as an imperialist enamy since communism in that country took hold in 1949. But within the past 10 years, China has opened its doors somewhat

"In the last three months, it has changed so rapidly," he said. "For example, the government opened 14 cities on the ast of China to the outside ... for trade. They have a huge plan for economic devel- China is now from the private opment."

Yuan said he believes Japan will play a more important role for China than the U.S. Japan recently granted $7 billion in aid to China.

"For my opinion, China and Japan will be dependent on each other more than ever before since the Second World War," Yuan said. "Japan doesn't have any natural resources. China has a huge variety of resources. Japan needs that and China needs the technology and money of Japan.'

Another impetus is that China and Japan are geographically close and culturally similar, Yuan said.

Politically, the Soviet Union's fall will have a significant impact on China.

'The largest superpower of communism no longer exists, now the only powerful one is China," he said. "For the U.S. strategy, China will probably be the next target. China realizes that and it's going to change itself economically and politically so it can survive better in the next century."

Yuan knows the power of the Chinese people and believes the real, lasting changes will come not from Japan, the U.S. or the former Soviet Union, but from within.

"No matter how powerful those emperors were in the history of China, they were thrown away by the people," he said. "The communist power, no matter how powerful it is now, will also be thrown away by the people."

The traditional communist economy is dominated by stateowned enterprises, but 48 percent of the national profit in sector, Yuan said.
