She said that the group has put all the shallowness behind them so the songs can get a little deeper into the subject.

"Since we sell out shows, I don't think there are any places we haven't been hired back," she said. "And if we were closeted, I don't think people would necessarily come in droves like they do, because we wouldn't be speaking to them so honestly."

Phillips, whose parents were members of a band called The Orphans, grew up in Houston and founded a punk group called Meat Joy before founding Two Nice Girls in 1985.

daughter of violinists. She is the founder of Liatris Media, which produces The Third Wave, a women's film and video festival held annually in Austin.

Barger, the Girls' drummer, loves rock 'n' roll and has played the drums since her teens. She joined Two Nice Girls in 1989, after a year of playing serious rock for another group called Childbearing Hips.

Hentges, who also plays guitar and sings, joined Two Nice Girls after seeing an advertisement in The Austin Chronicle. She had left the Neo-Boys, her all-female, post-punk group in Portland, five years before.

The band will perform at 8 p.m. on the EMU East Lawn's Main Stage on Sunday, May 17.
