Large, enthusiastic crowds are just part of the Hayward charm.

Athletes give thumbs up to Hayward Field

By Dave Charbonneau

Track athletes find something at Hayward Field they may have trouble finding in abundance anywhere else: support.

Eugene has earned the title as "Track Town, USA" by claiming to have the most supportive fans in the nation. Hayward has played host to the Olympic Trials, NCAA Championships and will host this weekend's Pacific-10 Conference Championships. And Eugene will likely have its share of big meets in the future.

The addition of the new Bowerman Building adds to the impressiveness of Hayward.

"I think everyone is interested in the new building," said Oregon women's head coach Tom Heinonen. "They see it as another piece, making it bigger and better than ever."

Hayward also lures many of the top track athletes coming out of high school to Oregon.

"The first time I competed here was in the high school mile my junior year," Oregon runner Tye Van Schoiack said. "The crowd was so loud, after that I knew this is where I wanted to go."

Even Oregon's opponents enjoy competing in Eugene because they like the fact the fans are so supportive of the sport.

"I just love competing here," Arizona decathlete Matt Dallow said. "There's nowhere like it anywhere."

"It's exciting to compete at Hayward," Arizona runner Marc Davis said. "Just the aura of Hayward Field makes you compete better. Even if you're not from Oregon, if you run a good race, the fans appreciate that."

The impact the crowd has on the races is so great that sometimes Oregon athletes get a bum rap because people think the only reason they are able to get good times is because of the momentum they get from the crowd.

"I read a story once that picked me to finish eighth in a race at Hayward because I would be running in front of 'those wild, rowdy Hayward Field fans,'" Van Schoiack said. "It's true, though. I want to perform well outside of Hayward so I can prove myself."

Every once in a while someone will give Hayward a bad name. It's no secret that Oregon fans have been known to not get along with Washington State men's coach John Chaplin. Earlier this season, a fan yelled obscenities at Chaplin at the end of a dual meet.

"I don't mind coming to Oregon," Chaplin said. "I like having meets at Hayward. It's just too bad when one or two people have to get filthy and ruin it for everyone else."

But for the most part, teams from around the Pac-10 have no problem with Hayward fans.

"I like to go up in the stands and knock a couple of fans out, personally," UCLA head Coach Bob Larsen joked. "We've never had any problems with the fans at Hayward. We've always had good experiences up there."
