Three charged in L.A. riot

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Three black men jailed in the beating of a white trucker were charged Thursday in attacks on 12 other people at the same intersection — and were called "a major factor" in starting the Los Angeles riots.

Prosecutors filed 33 new felony counts against Damian "Football" Williams, 19, Henry Keith "Kiki" Watson, 27, and Antoine "Twan" Miller, 20. A 7-month-old infant and two firefighters were among the victims, prosecutors said.

The three suspects were charged May 14 with attempted premeditated murder, aggravated mayhem, torture and second-degree robbery in the beating of Reginald Denny on April 29, shortly after four white policemen were acquitted of most charges in the beating of black motorist Rodney King.

Reiner singled out Williams as the ringleader who allegedly chose victims, spurred others to attack them and personally spray-painted the stomach and genitals of one man.

The three were arraigned Thursday afternoon, and Judge William Chidsey Jr. raised their bail, saying he now sees the case "in a new light."

Williams and Watson are members of a violent street gang known as the 8-Trey Gangster Crips, and Miller is an associate of the gang, Reiner said.

Seven-month-old Joshua Bejar suffered multiple cuts when a vehicle driven by his mother, Maria, was stopped in the intersection. Miller allegedly leaned into the car and struck passenger Francisco Aragon in the face with a brick, then smashed a back window, showering the baby with glass.

A spokesman for the Center for Constitutional Law and Justice, which represents Williams, said the additional charges were political.

MOVEMENT

be intellectual and cognitive from a young age. Men aren't taught to just feel their feelings."

University Counseling Center staff psychologist Mark Evans said University men don't seem to be conscious of the men's movement.

"Young men of college age are either living out the traditional male role," Evans said, "or they're rejecting that and they don't want to discuss the men's movement because of the way men have screwed things up in the world."

The men's movement enables men to express their inner pain and feelings, but not all men benefit from it, said Neil Meyer, a 31-year-old Austin, Texas, resident who has attended two men's retreats.

"If someone wants to show their emotions, those retreats are good for that," Meyer said, "but if they're going to want to reinforce the beer-drinking, sports guy at a bar, they're going to go away thinking it's ridiculous."

"I would encourage men to take part if they're looking for something sustainable in their life, if they want to live in a dynamic and challenging, but supportive atmosphere," he said.

Dennis McClure, a therapist at The Men's Resource Center in Portland, said the men's movement is an uphill battle. The Men's Resource Center is a counseling center that offers men's groups on domestic issues and general concerns.

"There's a growing interest in what it may mean to be a man," McClure said. "There's an interest in societal gender roles and how they might be expressed and become more functional and healthy. The lines are much softer than they were 20 or 30 years ago. Men have more permission to deviate from stringent roles."

Societal stereotypes of men's roles damage both men and women, he said.

"There's the stereotype of the man as a rescuer, which is not good for either the man or the woman," McClure said. "A part of the commitment to equality between the genders is stepping back and allowing women to make their own mistakes and not to jump in and rescue them."

The stereotype that men must always be in control of their emotions can lead men to abuse the women in their lives, he said.

"Men are walking around very cut off, alienated and unable to utilize their feelings," he said. "Control is an important cause of a number of domestic violence cases."
