Adelman on board for 1992-93

PORTLAND (AP) — The owner of the Portland Trail Blazers says the NBA team intends to sign Coach Rick Adelman to a contract extension soon.

"Rick is going to be back as coach," owner Paul Allen said Tuesday, dismissing rumors Adelman would be fired or moved to another position within the Blazers' organization.

Adelman, 46, has one year left on a three-year extension signed midway through his first full season as head coach of the Blazers.

During his three full years as coach, the Blazers have posted a 179-67 regular-season record, have twice won Western Conference championships and have twice made it to the NBA Finals.

Adelman sought a contract extension before the 1991-92 season but was told negotiations would be held after the season. After the team advanced to the Finals but lost to the Chicago Bulls, speculation was Allen was dissatisfied with Adelman's job performance.

"Rick has done an excellent job," Allen told the Oregonian. "Everybody in the organization was disappointed to lose in the Finals this year, and in the conference finals last year, and in the Finals before that. But we've had an incredible last three years."

Allen said it was impossible to set a timetable for contract negotiations to end.

"Because of the long season and then the draft, we haven't had time. After the draft, both sides will make proposals and it will be ongoing for the next few days or weeks."

Book Signing-Reading

Monday, June 29th • 7-9 pm • Wesley Center

Oregon author of the highly acclaimed River Why, David Duncan, will be reading from his newly released book, The Brothers K and signing copies in an event sponsored by the UO Bookstore.

The Brothers K, an enthralling American epic about baseball, idealism and Seventh Day Adventism revolves around the Chance family—a pair of good-natured parents and their pack of baseball-worshipping children. Like Duncan's first novel, The River Why, The Brothers K is an expansive work, full of life.
