vious choice.

"For the last few weeks I've consulted with a variety of people in these constituency groups and talked to them about the wisdom of this idea," Williams said. "Not surprisingly the president and I learned the overwhelming majority share our view about Rich and the appropriateness of appointing him to this position."

Brooks said he was flattered to be considered for the dual role as AD and head football coach, adding that he was looking forward to facing the challenge of the added responsibilities.

"I certainly wouldn't have considered it without consulting my wife Karen, who doesn't see very much of me as it is and will now see less of me," Brooks said. "But she's enthusiastic about it. 'I believe it is a workable situation,'" he said. "I've been here 15 years. I believe I know the state well. I believe I know our problems well. And I believe we have a very competent staff that is going to be instrumental in making this work — both football staff and athletic administrative staff."

Brooks said he appreciated the fact that his and Byrne's tenure as AD will overlap slightly, giving him a chance to learn the job from Byrne before he departs.

University President Myles Brand said the move was in keeping with the national trend for institutions to have direct oversight of intercollegiate athletics.

"We see this as entirely in the spirit of that activity," Brand said. "This is an opportunity to bring athletics even closer than it has been in the past to the rest of the mission of the institution."

Brand said another major factor in Brooks' hiring was that Brooks shared Brand's view about the role of academics in athletics.

"Yes I like to win games," Brand said. "But mostly I like to see the students graduate and do well. And I am confident those values are shared."

Brooks later affirmed his commitment to academics for student-athletes.

"I know there will be the nay-sayers who look at this as the fox guarding the hen house," Brooks said. "I believe we have run a good program on the football side. We have emphasized and tried very hard to make the academic experience of our students one that is of quality, and I want to reaffirm that as athletic director — not only for football athletes, but for all athletes."

struction, Kaufman remains upbeat about where the College of Education is heading.

"Measure 5 really creates an opportunity," Kaufman said. "It is actually a message from the public that we cannot continue to do things the way have been. To me that seems to be a wonderful climate for change."

Martin Kaufman

defined movement in education.

"Oregon is one of the most exciting national laboratories for educational reform," he said. "For a person like me who likes to be on the leading edge of innovation there is no better place to be than Oregon."

Part of the reform Kaufman would like to see is a shift of emphasis on the federal government for policy and management toward more self-reliance at the state and local level. He would like to have universities play a major role in this transformation.

"The only way to make the changes that are so critically needed, if our education is to succeed, is from the bottom up," Kaufman said. "What it means for universities is that we must stop thinking of ourselves as producing products. We need instead to help communities and their schools build the capacity to integrate education and other human services so they can more effectively meet the academic, emotional, cultural and social needs of all the children."

Kaufman is also looking forward to working with a nationally recognized faculty. Considering the faculty was able to garner more than $11 million worth of federal grants and contracts for the 1991-92 fiscal year, it comes as no surprise that they are well known.

Kaufman will be replacing Robert Gilberts, who will return to being a faculty member in the college's Division of Educational Policy and Management after serving for 22 years as the dean.

per year. The contract expires June 30, 1994.

"We're obligated to fulfill the employment contract if he comes to work," Grier said.

Monson is also suing for $221,066 he was due to receive from contracts outside the University. Under NCAA guidelines, the University was required to approve those agreements.

However, Grier said the University's only obligation is to pay Monson's salary.

"His other agreements are between him and those other people," Grier said.

Monson piloted the men's basketball team through nine seasons. But he was dismissed as head coach after the Ducks won only six games during the 1991-92 season.

During his nine years at the University, Monson posted a 116-145 record and led the Ducks to four winning seasons and three National Tournament bids, the last in 1989-90.

Athletic director Bill Byrne mentioned the 1991-92 losing season and a precipitous drop in ticket sales as factors in Monson's dismissal.
