Blacks strike in S. Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Millions of blacks joined a nationwide strike Monday in one of the largest protests ever against white rule. At least 12 deaths, including four at police hands, were linked directly to the walkout.

The violence erupted despite African National Congress and government calls for peace.

Most workers in black townships ringing South Africa's cities stayed home, leaving city centers largely deserted. Transportation officials said trains and buses in some areas were carrying as little as 2 percent of normal traffic.

Activists erected barricades in some areas to enforce the ANC-called strike. Roads and trains were blocked with burning car tires in parts of Cape Town and Durban.

The strike hit poor blacks hard.

"We don't like losing two days of pay. But we must do this to support the ANC," said Ernest Mnjeza, a 38-year-old security guard in Sebokeng, a violence-torn township south of Johannesburg.

Other blacks defied the strike, either out of opposition to the ANC campaign or because they feared they would lose their wages or their jobs.
