sex, there's a legal way to get high, and technology has removed many of the risks of the sea. But global warming is gaining fast, cults flourish, and greed is on the prowl.

Sallas is burned out and working as a fisherman in the fictional town of Kuinak. His home overlooking the burning dump is threatened when a movie company comes to town to film a children's story, Kesey's own "The Sea Lion."

It's actually a revenge plot by the albino illegitimate son of Alice Carmody, known as Alice the Angry Aleut for her Native American outrage.

The locals are corrupted with promises of quick riches from turning the funky town into a slick resort. Sallas tries to become a hero again, but is rejected by his friends. As the world falls apart, he falls in love with Alice, the yin to his yang.

"From the very beginning, I wanted to have these two forces battling and getting together," Kesey said. "I felt really that it was pertinent to what was happening in our society today.

There is a lot of argument between male and female — not just humans, but earth and sky and water. If love doesn't triumph... the hell with it."

Kesey was bitten with the Alaska bug 10 years ago, when he went to Skagway to help write the end of the movie Never Cry Wolf.

"Whatever is going to happen is going to happen up there," Kesey said. "It is big, raw and daring. The mountains dare you. 'You want to mine
