Lee and Fore look to make change

By Rene DeCair

In the four months they've been in office, the two 1992-93 student presidents have walked softly, so far avoiding controversy.

That's no small feat. If you think it's only difficult to stay out of political trouble on a national level, think again.

President Bobby Lee and Vice President Karmen Fore are among the more conservative two presidents this University has seen in a couple of years — and it's not just because Lee often wears a starched, white dress shirt and tie.

The former ASUO President Jennifer Bills, a lesbian woman, Vice President JoSonja Watson, a black woman, pledged to increase diversity and tolerance of others on campus. They took a public stance on sensitive, political issues.

Bills and University President Myles Brand, for example, worked together to prevent military discrimination of gay and lesbian students.

Lee, an English major, and Fore, who majors in political science, emphasize multiculturalism, but their goals seem more mainstream-progressive.

Moreover, they've managed to avoid scandals that by this time last year had already plagued the Bills/Watson presidency.

When it was learned that Watson shoplifted several small items from the University Bookstore, students unleashed a debate over politicians' private lives and speculated whether the controversy was only enflamed by racism.
