REMODELING CLEARANCE!

We're expanding our store!

We've outgrown our home, but rather than move our store to a larger, less familiar location, we're expanding and remodeling our storefront to face Olive Street. We're very excited about these changes, but our inventory is in the way of construction, so we're holding our Semi-annual Demo Clearance one month earlier. If you don't mind a little dust, you can get the best deals of the year from Eugene's only full-service, exclusively Macintosh® computer dealership. Don't dress up, but do hurry down for best selection.

ited by our budget," Leebrick said.

Moving on to more elaborate productions requires organizing a theater season with regular performances and a faithful audience. The regular season begins this month with seven productions planned through June of 1993.

The first regular season offering is a murder mystery dinner theater, called "Who Killed Frankie," which will run on Sundays through September. Leebrick said the show may go on longer if there is demand, but weather is a consideration because the audience is outside part of the time.

Audience participation is key to the play, as ticket holders are divided into groups of detectives to solve the mystery.

The plot unfolds as participants travel around town interviewing "suspects." The audience then gathers at Original Joe's to eat dinner and piece together the mystery.

Other upcoming productions include performances for both children and adults.

Rich Scheelands, director of operations at the Hult Center, said building a following is a make-or-break factor for most theater companies.

"They need to provide a season of solid shows," Scheelands said. "That will give them an economic foundation that's fairly solid."

Scheelands said creating a faithful audience can open the door for federal and private grants.

"When you apply for grants they want to see your track record," Scheelands said. "They want to see your track record over the past three years."

Tickets are available for "Who Murdered Frankie?" at Original Joe's, or by calling 465-1506.
