FIRE

zapping and mutilating."

The principal cast is almost entirely male, but that doesn't bother Fire's main actress, Georgia Emelin, who plays Walton's girlfriend.

"I'm having a great time hanging out with all these cute guys," said Emelin, who will appear in the new TV movie Deadly Relations with Robert Urich this month.

Sweeney likened the casting aspect to Memphis Belle, a recent film of his that also centered on a male group. Berg, of course, couldn't pass up the funny.

"That means a lot of flatulating is going on," Berg laughs.

Patrick, too, was full of surprises, trading in his invincible Terminator demeanor for a deep laugh and a love for the blues. He is as interested in talking about the movie as he is the industrial rock groups Nine Inch Nails, a group his brother plays guitar for, and Ministry, applauding their latest album.

"Wang dang, ding dong," sings Patrick, trying to get down the lyrics to the Ministry song, "Jesus Built My Hotrod."

After playing one of the greatest villains in cinematic history opposite Arnold Schwarzenegger in 72, Patrick was offered a number of "bad guy" roles. He said the part in Fire was just what he was waiting for, along with the lead in the upcoming thriller, The Cool Surface.

"This is the reason I waited for a film like this — I got so many offers for bad guys," Patrick said. "Why should I want to play a bad ass, when I played the ultimate bad ass?"

The real Travis Walton joined the set for a week of filming, recently, and actually plays a bit part in the movie.

At a town forum to discuss what should be done about the missing logger, a man stands up in the crowd, demanding, "Where is Travis Walton?"

His cameo appearance finished, the real Travis Walton then sits down, knowing full well where he was in 1975.
