

USC, not Coliseum, worries 3-2 Oregon

By Dave Charbonneau

Oregon head coach Rich Brooks isn't worried about playing in the Los Angeles Coliseum Saturday.

He's worried about the opponent.

The Ducks are on the road for the first time in four weeks and face 20th-ranked USC. Oregon has beaten the Trojans only once in 16 tries and haven't won at the Coliseum since 1971.

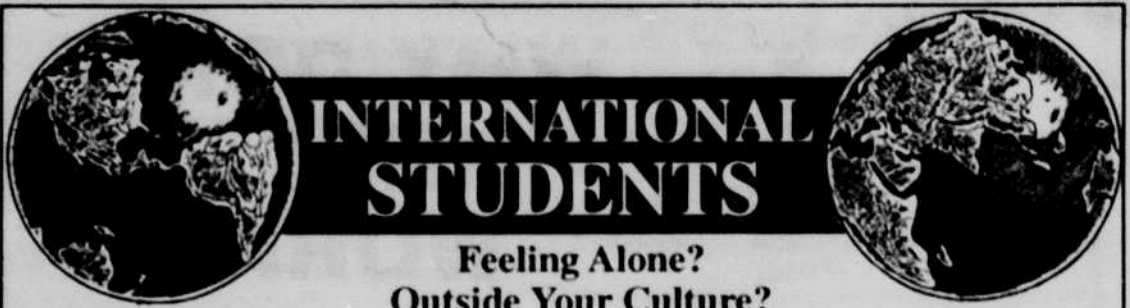

"It's not the place we're playing, it's the people we're playing," Brooks said. "If we were playing someone else in the L.A. Coliseum, it wouldn't be that difficult. It's the talent of their team, and they want the same thing we want this week, to get back in the conference race."

Oregon is 1-1 in the Pacific-10 Conference and USC is 0-1 after barely losing to Washington last weekend in Seattle, 17-10. Bowl hopes are on both teams' minds, and the winner Saturday will take a huge step closer to postseason play.

"We would be 2-1 in the conference and 4-2 overall and we'd be in position for an outstanding year," Brooks said. "Another league victory over USC would put us in the thick of the conference race."
