Husky memories not fond for Cas

By Dave Charbonneau
Emerald Sports Editor

Len Casanova is sort of like Oregon football's memory bank. The man who coached the Ducks for 16 years from 1951 to 1966 is now the Athletic Director Emeritus in the Oregon athletic department.

The 87-year-old Casanova has been around Oregon football for more than 40 years, and has many stories to tell, including memories of his experiences in the Washington-Oregon rivalry. The Huskies were not good to Casanova to say the least. His teams defeated Washington only three times in 16 years, and even the occasional victory was not too pretty.

In 1964, Oregon defeated the Huskies 7-0 in Seattle. Casanova's memory of the elusive victory is overshadowed by the brutal play of Washington's defense.

"The defense was just out-and-out going after our quarterback, Bob Berry," he said. "They didn't even bother about the ball carrier, they would just hit our quarterback. It happened two or three different times and the officials wouldn't call it. I ran out on the field and almost got a 15-yard penalty."

Possibly the most disappointing loss for Casanova came in 1960. Oregon was trailing 7-6, with under a minute left to go in the game. The Duck quarterback threw a long pass, but Husky fans had already converged on to the playing field, making it impossible for the receiver to catch the pass, and Oregon lost.

"I don't know if the kid would've caught the pass and scored or not," Casanova said, "but that was a rough one."

Casanova's first meeting with Huskies is the one that brings forth his most negative memories.

In 1951, Oregon won only two games all year.

"We had nothing as far as our team was concerned," he said. "The Washington game that year was the worst beating I ever took."

The Huskies ran up the score on Oregon, 63-6, and left their starters in for the whole game.

"That game is one I've always took in my graw," Casanova said. "It always kind of irritated me."

Casanova pointed out that all these games were against Washington teams coached by someone other than current Husky coach Don James.

Casanova said he would not expect either Oregon head coach Rich Brooks or James to run up the score on the other if given the chance. "I don't think Don James would do that," he said, "and I certainly don't think Rich would do it."

If there is a main concern for the Huskies, it lies in Oregon's defense, a defense that held USC to 226 yards total offense last week.

"It looks like their defense is better than ours," James said. "They shut down USC a lot better than we did."

Oregon's offense will have a hard time with Washington's pressure defense, especially if quarterback Danny O'Neil responds the way he did to USC's defense last week. O'Neil was sacked 13 times against the Trojans, and many of those sacks could have been avoided if O'Neil would have thrown the ball away. But with the pressure defense comes opportunities for the offense, if Oregon plays it right.

"Anytime you play a pressure defense, there's the possibility of a big play," Brooks said. "But it hasn't happened very often against Washington this season."

Notes: The Oregon injury list has not grown any bigger. "Everyone who was available against USC will be available this weekend," Brooks said ... The biggest crowd in the state's history is expected Saturday. More than 47,000 fans are expected ... According to the NCAA, Oregon has played the fifth-toughest schedule in the nation thus far this season. USC is second, Stanford is third and Oregon State is fourth ... Oregon kick returner Donovan Moore is sixth in the nation in kickoff returns. Kicker/punter Tommy Thompson ranks 12th in punts and 14th in field goals made.

Cal, Cards and Dawgs

Saturday marks the first weekend all Pacific-10 Conference teams are in action against each other.

UCLA will try to get its first Pac-10 victory of the season against undefeated Washington State.

The Bruins are coming off a 19-7 loss to Stanford at home and will have to go on the road this weekend. UCLA needs this win if it has any aspirations of a bowl appearance.

The Cougars jumped into the national rankings this weekend after a 35-10 victo-
