EGOS

But the "Ickey Shuffle" put an abrupt end to that fad.

Next came the kneel down in the end zone and the "Father, Son and Holy Spirit" demonstration by players of a more "religious" nature. Did anyone ever believe those guys went to church every Sunday?

But the "Touchdown-Makers of America" got together over the summer, and presumably decided they needed a new form of celebration.

Take off the helmet. Many a player this season has been seen removing his helmet after a touchdown or interception and looking for the nearest camera. A touchdown is no longer a testimony of a team's all-around performance, it's a chance for the running back, receiver, quarterback, or whomever scores the points to let the world see his pretty little face without the mask-like helmet.

But take a look at these same guys after a fumble, interception or dropped pass. It's guaranteed they will have their helmet conveniently placed on their noggin while standing on the sidelines, walking into the locker room and during the plane ride home.

Everyone who plays college football, or any football for that matter, is going to make his share of great plays. But a great play is not scoring on a one-yard bootleg or tackling a running back after a five-yard gain. It's called doing your job.

Imagine a lawyer raising his or her arms and dancing around the courtroom after winning an objection, or a firefighter taking off his helmet and saying "I'm number one" into KEZI's camera after putting out a fire.

Now imagine a football player scoring a touchdown, dropping the football and celebrating in an embrace with his teammates — who should be given most of the credit for the touchdown anyway.

College football is no longer a team sport, it's a sport of individuals trying to get the big money at the next level.

Maybe stripping the helmet and mugging for the camera is intended for prospective endorsements. But from the looks of some of these football players, the helmet should definitely stay on.

So after the rooster-on-speed and helmet-peel fads have run their courses, what can we expect next? A little humility would be something few have tried this season.

MOSCOW - DECEMBER, 1969

MR. BREZHNEV, I'LL COME RIGHT TO THE POINT...

I'M A YOUNG AMERICAN STUDENT, AND I'D LOVE TO ORGANIZE SOME ANTI-AMERICAN DEMONSTRATIONS ON FOREIGN SOIL!

I SEE. WOULD YOU BE WILLING TO BE A USEFUL IDIOT, A DUPE FOR THE KGB?

NO, NO, I COULDN'T DO THAT. I HAVE TO PROTECT MY POLITICAL VIABILITY...

BUT LOOK— LET'S SEE IF WE CAN'T FIND SOME MIDDLE GROUND.

HMM... THIS YOUNG MAN IS SLICK...
