QUESTION:
What do you think of the Autzen Stadium keg ban?

"They did this at Michigan when I was an undergrad. It just changes the location where people get drunk. It might also be more dangerous."

JAMES WITTENBACH
first-year law student

"I really haven't thought about it because I've never been to a kegger. If there have been a lot of problems with beer at the games, I could understand the ban."

ABBY CELLERS
senior, sociology

"It's pretty harsh on students that are responsible when they drink. If students are responsible enough to go to a bar and drink, then they should be able to drink at Autzen."

MARC MCREYNOLDS
senior, general science

"I disagree with it. I see nothing wrong with kegs at Autzen. It's part of the fun at the game. It's not what football is all about, but it is fun for those of legal drinking age."

STAN BURTON
junior, history

"I don't know what the problem was, and people are still going to get just as rowdy without kegs. People will drink before the game, and the ban won't make any difference."

KIMBERLY VALWAY
junior, biology

"I'm against it because it causes too much waste with cans and bottles. The U of O always says it's trying to be so environmentally aware. And this step isn't."
