Ducks try to salvage season against Cougs

This weekend, the Oregon football team is going for three straight.

Not three straight victories, but three straight attempts at beating a top-20 team.

The Ducks will face Washington State Saturday in Pullman. The Cougars are one of five Pacific-10 Conference teams in the top 20. Oregon has already played — and lost — to three of them. Oregon lost to Stanford 21-7 in the second game of the season and is coming off back-to-back losses to No. 13 USC and No. 2 Washington.

The Cougars are possibly the only team that has a chance of unseating the Huskies from the Pac-10 throne, but they must win the rest of their games, including a contest against Washington in the final game of the season.

The Ducks have been relegated to the role as spoiler for the rest of the season. Oregon's bowl chances are slim, even if it won the rest of its games.

"We're 3-4, and we'd like to be hanging around in November with a possibility of post-season play," Oregon coach Rich Brooks said. "They are in the Rose Bowl race, so playing anybody ought to be a big game for them."
