

Bush is history, Bill Clinton in '92

Why Bill Clinton?

Because he has a comprehensive economic plan that puts people first; a plan that recognizes the inherent flaws of trickle-down theory. Clinton is aware of the problems America faces. He is as in touch with the voting public as a politician can be.

For months we've been listening to George Bush deny that we're in a recession, blame it on everyone else and then claim he's responsible for the small upswing in the economy that occurred a week ago. He has proved unwilling to accept blame but more than willing to accept accolades.

Bush continually refuses to acknowledge the problems this country faces. Health care insurance is hard to obtain, unemployment is growing, the inner cities are decaying and America's technology is falling behind. Yet Bush continues his blind allegiance to trickle-down economics on the premise that we will pull ourselves out of this bind.

Bush doesn't understand that while the rich are pocketing more money, the poor and homeless populations are sinking fast. Trickle-down economics assumes the rich, through tax incentives, will be inclined to invest in private industry, which in turn will create more jobs for Americans and a stronger economy.

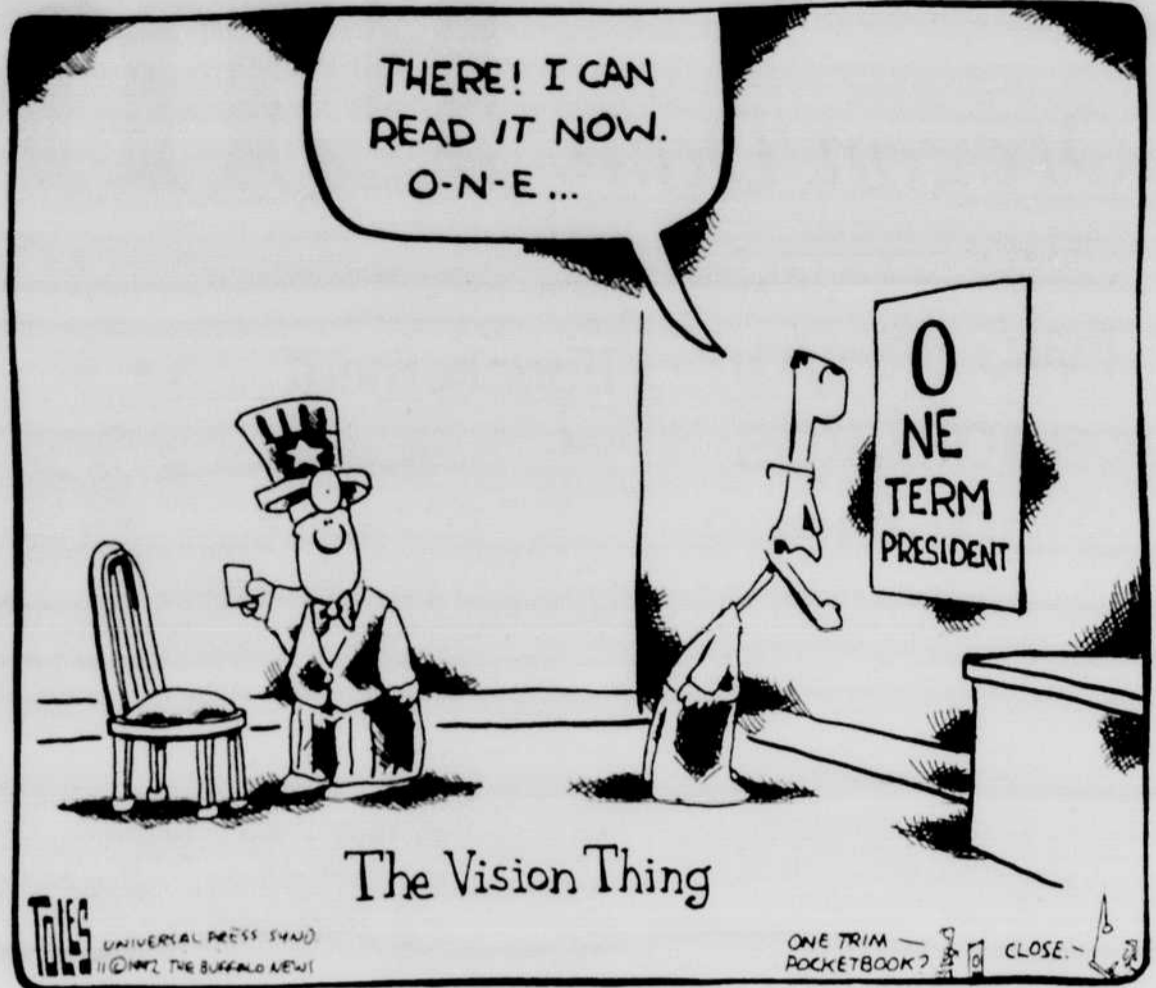

Clinton offers something different. "Change" has been an overused word in this election, but it's truthfully the best we can hope for.

Clinton has hope for the future. He recognizes that Reaganomics has not worked and that something else must be done. His system may not work either. Not all of Franklin D. Roosevelt's programs were successful, but he recognized that government had to take an active role in pulling the country out of recession. Reagan and Bush had their chance with trickle-down. Now Clinton must have his chance to improve the economy.

Whether it be health care, job training, the environment or inner-city decay, Clinton offers real solutions on how to get things done. People say he has 100 ideas for every problem, that he is a "policy wonk." But at least he has ideas and is willing to take chances. Expecting the country to fix itself is absurd, economically and socially. We need a candidate who will not cry out, "Come on people, it's not that bad."

Clinton is not a knight in shining armor. He has negative characteristics. For people to assume he can pull us out of this recession overnight is unrealistic. But he offers solid ideas and hope for the future — more than can be said of the other two candidates.

This is the time for change. And Clinton believes this country can move forward while recovering from the recession at the same time. We must prepare for the 21st century while addressing the problems of 1992. Bill Clinton is the man to take us forward.
