

GAME PREVIEW

Bruins hope to play spoiler against Ducks

Don't expect Oregon to watch too many game films of UCLA this week, the Ducks spent all of last year watching them.

The 1992 UCLA and 1991 Oregon football teams are two very similar teams. Last year the Ducks were coming off of two straight years playing in a bowl game and were optimistic about a third year before injuries depleted their offensive backfield. Danny O'Neil was injured early in the year and the Ducks played five different quarterbacks before the year ended.

This season, the Bruins are coming off a 9-3 season capped off with a victory in the John Hancock Bowl and were looking at a possible game on New Year's Day. Tommy Maddox, their projected starter at quarterback, is now throwing passes for the Denver Broncos, and UCLA has had to play four quarterbacks this year.

"The two teams are similar, especially at quarterback," Oregon head coach Rich Brooks said. "Maybe now people in Southern California can appreciate the importance of an experienced quarterback. One of the most difficult things to do in football is switch quarterbacks."

Don't expect Oregon to be overconfident or sympathetic against the Bruins, because the Ducks know they need to win both of their final games if they want to have any chance of a bowl invitation. However, Brooks said talk about post-season play is premature.

"We are not alive if we lose," Brooks said. "They are good up front and can really control the line of scrimmage. Walker is a force at nose guard, and Chalenski is playing outstanding football. Their secondary is talented and fast, and overall, their defense is the 14th best in the nation."

UCLA may not look like a top opponent, but its defense is one of the best in the country. The defense is led by senior defensive end Mike Chalenski, junior nose guard Bruce Walker and an outstanding secondary spearheaded by Carlton Gray and Othello Henderson.

"UCLA's defense is solid," Brooks said. "They are good up felt we had to spread the ball around. We have done a good job of getting the ball to our backs and tight ends, and Ronnie Harris and Anthony Jones are playing a bigger role."

UCLA, 4-5 overall and 1-4 in the conference, has a rich tradition of football and is still aiming for a winning season.

"If we can muster enough good play, we certainly have a chance to have a winning season, which would be great," UCLA coach Terry Donahue said. "We certainly
