

Board heeds protest

By Sarah Clark

The effective date for proposed tighter tuition residency requirements should be changed from July 1, 1993 to Nov. 1, 1993, a state Board of Higher Education committee decided Friday.

If the date is changed, out-of-state students who came to the University before Nov. 1, 1992 could apply for residency under the old, less restrictive rules.

The committee will recommend the change to the board when it meets Friday at 1 p.m. in the EMU Gumwood Room. The meeting is open to the public.

Anyone who wants to address the board must give the Chancellor's Office 10-days notice. However, written correspondence sent to Room 170 Susan Campbell by Thursday will be delivered to board members, said OSBHE Secretary Virginia Thompson.

The committee recommended no other major changes to the proposal, which would deny residency to out-of-state students in Oregon primarily for educational purposes. Students enrolled in more than seven credit hours per term "shall be presumed to be in Oregon for primarily educational purposes," according to a draft of the proposal.

Committee chairman George Richardson said other language in the proposal was flexible enough so that officials at each institution could determine if students should get residency.

"Overall, we feel that we've got a policy that's fair and equitable," Richardson said.

The board was supposed to vote on the proposal at its Oct. 23 meeting, but OSBHE President Bob Bailey instead appointed the ad hoc committee to review it and address student concerns. Bailey said the board will vote on residency requirements Friday.

Although the board has the right to change the rules at any time, Richardson said, the committee wanted to be fair to students who had moved to Oregon with the idea they could get residency under the old rules.

"We felt that it was the right thing to do," Richardson said. "Hopefully, the board will adopt what we recommend."

CORRECTION

An article in the Nov. 5 issue of the Emerald contained a factual error.

All University employees are free to take personal political stands.

However, Myles Brand's position as University president precludes him from separating his personal beliefs from those of the University, said the University's legal counsel.
