Teams begin expansion draft

NEW YORK (AP) — Bryan Harvey, Charlie Hayes and Jack Armstrong were among the more prominent players picked in the first two rounds Tuesday as the Colorado Rockies and Florida Marlins began the expansion draft by going in different directions.

Lee Smith, Danny Tartabull, Shawn Dunston and Jose Lind, all mentioned in possible trade talks, were not selected. Instead, Florida focused on minor leaguers at the start while Colorado concentrated on lower-priced veterans.

But Marlins general manager Dave Dombrowski said he still expected a half-dozen deals by the time the third and final round was finished. There was a chance, for example, that Jody Reed would be traded from Colorado to Los Angeles and that Greg Hibbard might go from Florida to the Chicago Cubs.

As expected, Atlanta pitching phenomenon David Nied was the No. 1 overall choice by Colorado. Toronto outfield prospect Nigel Wilson was taken next by the Marlins. It figured that the two best teams would be tapped to start stocking the National League clubs that might be the worst in 1993.

After that, it was clear which way the Marlins and Rockies were going in the first round as they took turns choosing players left off 15-man protected lists. Colorado went for experience and Florida went with youth in baseball's first draft since Toronto and Seattle picked 16 years ago, and both avoided the available, high-priced talent.

There was mostly silence from the assembled general managers and the fans from Florida and Colorado as the picks were announced. The draft was held in the same ballroom where the NFL draft is conducted each April, but there were none of the crazed fans who curse and cheer each pick from the balcony.

It was all business as the Rockies, looking for power hitters to play at Mile High Stadium and experienced pitchers to keep the ball down, loaded up right away on current major leaguers.

Colorado's first 11 picks, including Hayes, Reed, Jerald Clark, Kevin Reimer, Alex Cole, Darren Holmes and Joe Girardi have all played in the majors. There was a chance, however, that Reed and Reimer would be traded once the draft was completed with each team having 36 players.

Twelve of Colorado's 13 choices in the first round have been in the big leagues, combining for a total of 2,794 games in the majors. The average age of the Rockies' first-rounders for opening day 1993 is 26.7, and only five of the players will be 25 and under by then.

"Just throw a lot of sinkers and keep the ball down," advised Holmes, who pitched for Milwaukee's Triple-A Denver team last season.

The Marlins, meanwhile, began an immediate youth movement.

Of Florida's 13 picks in the opening round, only six have been in the majors, combining for 622 games. They took 10 players who will be 25 and under by next April, for an average age of 24.6 on opening day.

The only odd name in the Marlins' lot was Harvey, who led the American League with 46 saves in 1991, but missed most of the last year with an elbow injury. The California Angels owed him $11.25 million for the next three years.
