Thanks to Oregon's loss last year to Oregon State, the Ducks lost some interest from the state.

A win Saturday over Oregon State at Parker Stadium would help the Ducks regain some interest from both the fans and the bowls — more specifically, the Independence Bowl.

When asked about his thoughts of being considered for the bowl, it was obvious where the importance in Saturday's game lies for Oregon head coach Rich Brooks.

"I have none," he said. "I'm just trying to find a way to defend the Oregon State option and for us to find the end zone again."

Oregon (5-5, 3-4 in the Pacific-10 Conference) has relied heavily on kicker Tommy Thompson all season, and that reliance backfired last weekend when Thompson missed a 19-yard field goal in the fourth quarter of Oregon's 9-6 loss to the Bruins.

Brooks said the Duck offense can't assume Thompson will bail them out of a stalled drive.

"What we need to do is find a way to get in the end zone," Brooks said. "It comes down to being able to make key plays within a drive or at the end of the drive to get in the end zone."

Oregon State (1-8-1, 0-6-1) enters the game as the 11th rushing team in the nation. Its option offense has worked well at times, and poorly at others. Last year, the Beavers' offense gave the Ducks fits, rushing for 323 yards. But the play that put the nail in the coffin for the Beavers was when running back Chad Paulson faked the run and threw a 20-yard touchdown pass to Mau-
