proach to ending violence against women" hung above the door of the house.

Rauch said she is satisfied with the way the University's dean of students office handled her complaint against the individual. But Rauch and the other protesters said they are angered the entire chapter of the fraternity was not disciplined and charged that members are still engaging in sexual misconduct.

"Phi Kappa Psi fraternity was instructed, by the dean's office, to hold rape seminars in response to my rape and the irresponsible drinking atmosphere that they provided," Rauch said. "It is important to note that few, if any, of these seminars have actually taken place and that rape seminars are not discipline but education."

However, both Govro and Elaine Green, associate dean of students and student conduct coordinator, said two seminars have taken place and more are planned.

Green handled the complaint and helped Rauch and her alleged assailant reach their agreement. Green filed an additional complaint against the fraternity and reached an agreement with Govro regarding the seminars.

Although Green did not disclose the nature of her complaint, she said it was not concerning rape. Green said she has seen no pattern of sexual misconduct at Phi Psi.

Rauch said the impetus for the demonstration included a more recent complaint of attempted rape filed with the University against a Phi Psi member.

Rauch said she plans to file a complaint against the fraternity if no disciplinary action is taken. She is asking, among other things, that the entire University chapter be dissolved. The only action the University could take, Green said, is to disaffiliate the fraternity from the University.

Protesters made accusations about the number of rapes and attempted rapes by Phi Psi members this term alone. Although statistics from unofficial complaint forms have not yet been compiled for fall term, Green said two rapes have been reported to her office. One complaint involved a fraternity, and one did not, she said.

"I'm concerned that rape is something that happens everywhere," Green said. "Last year, when there was a rape in the dorms, the focus was on stranger rape. But date rape can't be ignored, and you can't assume that you'll be safe at a fraternity party."

Fraternity members had little to say after protesters descended on the house at 729 E. 11th Ave., and the most heated confrontations took place between women.

Several female members of Greeks Against Rape defended Phi Psi's educational efforts.
Aimee Markwith told the crowd she opposed the protest.
