BLAZERS

Some may say this is not a smart move by Drexler because he's basically forcing the players who did actually have sex with the girls stand up and admit to doing it.

Imagine that. Can anyone really blame Drexler — an NBA all-star and former Olympian — for not wanting his name linked with a bunch of immature, juvenile excuses for professional athletes?

Drexler and Terry Porter are the only two players whose names were on the list that have been outspoken about the whole deal. The other four have kept their mouths shut. (If you don't know who the other four are, but think you have a good idea, you're probably right.)

Now, this is not to say that the players were totally at fault here. After all, these girls were runaways, so you know they were looking for attention. They did consent to having sex with players, even their parents admit that. These girls were looking to score just as much as the players were, and anyone who argues that is just plain ignorant.

You think these girls didn't realize the story they would have if they slept with members of the Portland Trail Blazers? They even lied about their ages to the players.

These girls are just as guilty as the Blazer players are. They went to their hotel room, they stayed when things got hot, and they consented.

What is at question here is the lack of class and maturity exhibited by the Blazer players. The girls were young and looking for acceptance. The players are rich, famous and, most importantly, adults.

While Portland fans jump up and down, screaming at the press and the Salt Lake City police department for releasing the information about their beloved little Blazers, they should remember one thing:

Never leave your daughters alone at the Gap. A Blazer player may need a date that night.
