

Edicts of the Heart

It always seemed to me that Valentine's Day began because people got used to holidays from Halloween through New Year's. I mean, an excuse for unromantic people to suddenly act like they care about flowers, good manners and Whitman's Samplers is all it seems to come down to.

Nonetheless, it is a popular day, and in that spirit, the Emerald is providing a list of videos that, for one reason or another, may be appropriate choices for this, the pinkest of holidays.

•Husbands & Wives: Coming soon to video, this is probably the last time Mia Farrow and Woody Allen will be featured in a motion picture together. The plot involves an extremely hate-filled Farrow splitting up with Woody because she believes he doesn't want her and the fact that he is having an affair with a college student in her early twenties.

No, it's not a documentary, but it feels like one. It is a terrific film on its own merits even if it is hard to distinguish from real life. If you think you and your lover are having problems, check this out, and you'll feel positively blessed.

•Dogfight: River Phoenix stars as a Marine engaged in a reprehensible game called a dogfight where the young soldiers bring the ugliest date possible to a dance. The soldier with the biggest "dog" is the winner. He brings a young woman played by Lili Taylor who finds out about the fool she is being made of and confronts Phoenix.
