Wrestlers go to Boise for Pac-10 tournament

By Erick Studenicka
 Emerald Sports Reporter

Talk about going to extremes. Oregon's only individual champion in last year's Pacific-10 Conference wrestling tournament, Dan Vidlak, weighed 118-pounds and wrestled in the lightest weight division.

This year the situation is on the other end of the spectrum, as heavyweight Chris Anderson appears to be the best hope for an individual title at this weekend's Pac-10 wrestling tournament at Boise State.

"We don't have any No. 1 seed going into the tournament, but Chris has a good chance to do well in the heavyweight division," Oregon coach Ron Finley said. "But to win the title, he'll have to beat Seth Woodhill from Cal-Poly (San Luis Obispo), who is one of the best wrestlers in the conference."

Anderson, a former lineman on the football team, has the best dual meet record of wrestler with his 10-3 record. Anderson placed fifth in last year's tournament.

Finley said he would be pleased if Oregon could qualify five wrestlers for the NCAA tournament. In order to qualify for the NCAA tournament, a wrestler must place within the top three at the Pac-10 meet.

"No one is qualified going into the meet," Finley said. "You can only qualify coming out of the the tournament."

Finley said 134-pounder Cory Sonnen, Pat Craig (150 pounds), Mat Sprague (167 pounds), and Jeff McCoy (190 pounds) would all have a good chance at qualifying for the tournament.

"Sonnen has gotten much better as the season has progressed," Finley said. "Craig took second last year, but he's in the toughest weight division this year."

Arizona State, ranked No. 4 in the country, is expected to take the team title.
